Cause:

Draining north storm water holding tank to Patrick Bayou after sampling for approval, the level of the tank was allowed to go below the stoppage point. This allowed a very small amount of organic to escape into Patrick Bayou. The small amount of organic caused a small oil sheen to appear on the water surface.

Action to Minimize:

Stopped the draining of the storm water tank and placed floating booms across the bayou to stop any organic that would proceed down the waterway. The oil sheen was so light that it dissipated very quickly.
